MEDFORD, Ore. — Cindy Mayo, chief executive for Providence in Southern Oregon, has announced she will retire in August. During her time with Providence in southern Oregon, Cindy has been instrumental in growth of many services, including Providence Medical Group, and in connecting local experts with Providence’s clinical programs across the state. She cites her greatest achievement as putting in place an incredible and dynamic team of leaders, providers and caregivers that will help to meet the future needs for the ministry.

“Cindy is a true person of Providence, a leader whose passion has grown our Mission of service in southern Oregon and whose community presence is valued as a health care expert,” says Theron Park, chief executive, Oregon delivery system. “Her service to our Providence Mission exemplifies her deep commitment of caring for the poor and vulnerable. We will miss her a lot but are happy she will be spending more time with her husband and family, relaxing into retirement and choosing her own schedule.”

Prior to her work in southern Oregon, Cindy was chief executive for Providence services in Centralia, Wash. for six years. Cindy will be with Providence through mid-August as a new leader is recruited and responsibilities are transitioned. Cindy will also continue to help lead some of Providence’s ongoing priorities in southern Oregon during the transition, including representing Providence on some local boards.

“I am humbled by all who have served alongside me, and am thankful for all who have supported me in our work of in caring for the poor and the vulnerable,” says Mayo. “I am confident in our team continuing the Mission of Providence for many more years.”
